New Poetry by Denise Jarrott

Rembrandt's Susanna and the Elders, pen and brown ink, 1650-1652

manhunt

will I always be poor always a slowing of small pittings where roots were milkweed meadowsweet

rue or pink lilies on a backdrop dark, blooming rather against than next to themselves vibrating against the black soil deep as a hole in the ground and quick to wither, water the horizon a series of holes and oaks the field dressed as deer as viper

swell into a dawn dark, then day as garden

as the sun red as fish mouths in Iowa in summer while here I keep my eye to the scope to the fourth county over to the fielded to the fallow now

I can scale up a wall now

I am pressing my hair against the sap of a tree I have learned now

I will not be free will I always be with Iowa where I was exposed grass flat land grazed like a comb through my wet hair

my six years

body folded

up in the towel

of okoboji

where I learned to fear my god

given ability

to see snakes

dark ropes

in the dark

soil the darkness from which the honey-gold

the sweet

corn springs tall

springs bright springs

sweet

water

no, I am not a farmer's daughter

though my grandmother

was my grandmother gold and black teeth she was the child of a farmer she ate nothing but corn she thinks not of herself no I am not my father's daughter spring-
loaded the metal somehow always cold is this supposed to make me feel safe colt number to give me peace the kind I could rest in if I wanted to I wanted to my father
points a smith
and wesson a remington
at a shape
at a man
at an outline
of a boyfriend

of a starling, of a squirrel the only way to feel safe is to sleep with death between your knees between your teeth with death under the bed as if in the yellow light of farmhouses you'd win you'd know what to do you'd hold death against their heads you'd keep death hidden in a closet in a chest you'd keep it near you'd keep us all alive
I learned no poisonous snakes live in Iowa no lions no sharks just men made of leather lubricated laughter killdeer nested in the rocks at the water plant was I not always looking to be approached by a colt by a steer, not looking to see a streak of orange move across my line
of vision not looking

to meet god in a grove, in a field in a cave by a river

Io a white bull with clover in my fist as defense fed held out circled in looking out at a pocked horizon at a land I loved only because it was wounded from whose hand I fed on meat so red it made me cramp my body seized like a fist

I swum out to the middle of the lake I played a game I spent my money in another place I placed a bet my body made of golden tickets of air heavy as water isn't there a place where a body is supposed to end isn't there someone I'm supposed to find a soft wavering, a shimmering a minnow, a mouth

a how and a why, a wren, a winnowing, a face,

I could wipe, hair I could brush

I could feed it food and the food would go away alive even when I wasn't looking

AUTOMATA

My new job is to exchange one thing for another,

My new job is to install veils between the wealthier members of the audience and my compatriots. My new job is to balance a camel on the head of a pin, my new job is to make it dance, and isn't it the dance that connects me to the world? Aren't I lucky to be here at all, squashing cockroaches that rain down from the ceiling, aren't I lucky to support my whole family with my brain in it's numb skull? My new job affords me and my family a vacation at the lake two hours north of the lake on which we live. My new job is to fill my mouth with clear goo and call it a hot meal. My new job is working toothpaste to the end of the tube and not leave any toothpaste behind. My new job is to become a screen, bright white, for everyone to yell at, my job is to be a white sheet to throw tomatoes at. My new job involves a lot of interface with the public. My new job is to make sure my hatred doesn't leak out of the holes in my face. My new job is better than no job.

My new job is dabbing drool off of a wall of stuffed animals. My new job is cleaning up blood and cum and spit and shit and snot. When my new job is over (for today), my compatriots and I go out for wine we spill wine all over each other, we spill blood. We go home and pat our stomachs which for today are full. We go home but do not squeeze our hands goodbye. I am in a cab and I hate myself for it,

I pull my smock over my face so that I cannot see the numbers tick and glow, my new job is beating its fists against my brain. I think I'm growing a new worry stone in my body, I think my body is full of piss but I do not want to move.

I might piss in the street before I get home, get in bed alone. How much does this cost, how much?
