Two Poems by henry 7. reneau, jr: "watch what they mouth say, but listen what they hands do" and "The Book of Hours"

AIR THORNS / image by Amalie Flynn watch what they mouth say, but listen what they hands do i grew up hearing certain accents & vocabularies & speech patterns that were the aural essence of Home or the audible signal of danger: the feral howl of incarceration, or the sudden voicelessness of the morgue, that makes Home a muted whisper of fear, or pain that is slow to change, that is now, & how it's always been, a metaphor's promise of how it ought to be: trying to reach the next world with a spoon; (thrust lever lift toss.) my life, a soundtrack of false platitudes flattering the air of thorns about my ears, continually looping a distorted truth, a disabled symbolism for freedom, like a gimp would drag the weight of her body, to exist with a deleted allotment of common sense, blind, cripple & crazy as drowning in silence. we hear nothing, but the clean crack of hearts breaking, & the accepted ruin of matters of fact. Repetition like a shovel searching out the truth; (thrust lever lift toss.) a soundtrack now, looping funeral dirges of national carrion eagles & securitized oil, the official government propaganda: an Oscar worthy suspension of disbelief patriotic cheering the murder of bin Laden, that goes viral & seals a book deal. & movie credits, for Seal Team 6;

(thrust lever lift toss.)

The Book of Hours

The sun sets on enhanced interrogation, even as it rose, exponentially, on drone strikes, like the sum of collateral damage became a euphemism, beyond our peripheral vision, & we held the shining black eye of history in our mouth, as if we imagined God in our every breath, as if we are, all of us, alone in the complicity of others.