New Poetry from Alita Pirkopf: "Roadkill," "Sounds of the Past," "Spring," and "Unhealthy"

BLOOD IN BUCKETS / image by Amalie Flynn ROADKILL

I bring you blood in buckets, a heart that I hear, a palsied hand. It has been eight, ten years, my issue. The same as twenty years ago when your father felt about me as you do now. I felt the world shrink but I thought something, not necessarily the world, would end. I had not thought the world lay flat, as Renaissance cartographers mapped it. But now, like an automobile tire not only flapping, flattening, parts of it, or me, lie on the shoulder of my road with dead things and dirt.

SOUNDS OF THE PAST

She thought she had found soft music and warm dialect, a sunny sort of near-Italian soul,

But surfaces surprise. She found out. She found that underneath pounded a martial drumbeat vibrating still from Vienna's center, his childhood years under the Third Reich, a father fighting occupying Yugoslavia with others missing the village polkas, his son.

A burst of marches, explosions, still resounding. All of us hearing pounding steps and hearts.

SPRING

Shreds remain unraveled weavings of brown grasses and mud in branches a bird eyed for her family tree. The rest, the nest, that we had watched through last week's window, fell. The dog found blue broken eggs in the grass. Families, all of us consider seriously. Upsetting winds come to nests. It is spring and windows open views and dooryards fill with the ambiguity of lilacs.

UNHEALTHY

I loved my doctors until one played sick games, touching and taunting, and knowing of rules I didn't know. Telling jokes I didn't understand. Dismissing me for my naivete stupidity.

The years passed, and he operated on me appropriately, savingly. Later he mentioned dining together or going out
for coffee, but didn't ask,
and got angry for reasons
I didn't know, saying
I hadn't said I'd go.
